

Lainibyfield.com

Your 21-Day Seeker Pattern Calendar

LB

Food has become your most reliable source of stimulation - a quick way to change your state when things feel flat or repetitive.

day

SHIFT 1

Notice the pull today.

1

day

Flat, restless, or bored?

2

day

Boredom is a signal. Not a command.

3

day

What were you doing just before?

4

day

SHIFT 2

The kitchen or the pattern?

5

day

Is this your body or your brain?

6

day

Stimulation or hunger?

7

day

Sit with it for five minutes first.

8

day

You noticed. That's enough.

9

day

SHIFT 3

Before the fridge - move first.

day

Change the task, not the room.

day

Give your brain something real.

day

Novelty that isn't food.

day

The urge passed. Note that.

day

What actually changed your state?

day

You interrupted it. Good.

day

SHIFT 4

The pattern is predictable now.

17

day

You know what triggers this.

18

day

It will come back. You're ready.

19

day

Name it before it names you.

20

day

You already know what to do.

21

HOW TO USE

Laminate or slip into a sheet protector with a dry-erase marker. Write the day of the week in each small square. Erase and reuse any time.

CLEAN COPY

Scan to download

Seeker Pattern Cue Key

Use this side when a calendar phrase needs a reminder. These cues are reminders of what you already know.

SHIFT 1

Notice the pull today.

The Seeker pattern activates when stimulation is low. Noticing the pull before acting on it is the first interruption. You do not have to stop it yet. Just see it.

Flat, restless, or bored?

Flat energy is the Seeker's cue. Not hunger. The body is looking for a state change and food is the fastest available option. Recognizing the emotional state before the reach changes what happens next.

Boredom is a signal. Not a command.

The urge to eat when bored is real and biological. It is information about your current state, not an instruction about food. You can receive the signal without acting on it.

What were you doing just before?

The Seeker pattern almost always follows a specific context - a repetitive task, a slow afternoon, a transition between activities. Tracing the cue backward reveals the pattern's trigger.

SHIFT 2

The kitchen or the pattern?

Walking to the kitchen when you are not hungry is the pattern moving, not your body. The kitchen is the location. The pattern is the driver. Naming which one is in charge changes the moment.

Is this your body or your brain?

Physical hunger builds slowly and accepts many foods. The Seeker's pull is fast, specific, and looking for something interesting. The question separates need from pattern.

Stimulation or hunger?

The Seeker pattern uses food as a stimulant, not a fuel. Asking which one you are responding to before eating is the pause the pattern cannot survive.

Sit with it for five minutes first.

The Seeker's urge is intense and short. Most of the time, five minutes of doing something else is enough to dissolve it. The urge does not grow - it passes.

You noticed. That's enough.

Recognition without action is still progress. You do not have to interrupt every urge perfectly. Noticing it is the whole practice at this stage.

SHIFT 3

Before the fridge - move first.

Physical movement changes the brain's state faster than food does and without the pattern. A short walk, a different room, a change of task - any of these addresses the actual need.

Change the task, not the room.

The Seeker pattern is triggered by understimulation, not location. Changing what you are doing is more effective than changing where you are doing it.

Give your brain something real.

The pattern reaches for food because nothing else is available to engage with. Giving the brain a genuinely interesting task removes the reason the pattern fires.

Novelty that isn't food.

Novelty is the actual need. Food is one delivery mechanism. Any genuinely new or engaging experience serves the same function without the pattern consequence.

The urge passed. Note that.

Every time the urge passes without being acted on is evidence that it was never about hunger. That evidence accumulates. Note it explicitly.

What actually changed your state?

After the urge passes, identify what shifted. This builds a personal map of non-food state changers that is more reliable than willpower.

You interrupted it. Good.

An interruption - any interruption - is the pattern breaking. It does not have to be elegant. It just has to happen.

SHIFT 4

The pattern is predictable now.

You have enough data to know when the Seeker pattern fires and why. Predictability is not a trap. It is a map.

You know what triggers this.

The trigger is not random. It is specific to your day, your energy level, your context. Knowing it removes the element of surprise the pattern depends on.

It will come back. You're ready.

The Seeker pattern does not disappear. It becomes manageable. Knowing it will return and having a response ready is the maintenance phase.

Name it before it names you.

Naming the pattern as it arrives - out loud or in your mind - interrupts its automaticity. The pattern cannot run a person who is watching it run.

You already know what to do.

The cue, the pause, the redirect - you have practiced this enough that the response is available. Trust it.